

Second Edition of City and Peninsula

When the Christ-church and Akaroa Civic Trusts co-operated in 2007 to publish City and Peninsula, their goals were to show off the region's rich heritage to visitors from overseas and to encourage local people to protect that heritage. Neither Trust dreamt that four years later they would be publishing a second edition of the book with an entirely different purpose – as a record of heritage that has been almost entirely lost. The book is now an incomparable record of the heritage of Christchurch, Lyttelton and Akaroa before that heritage was diminished by the earthquakes and the demolitions that followed. It is a reminder of what we once had – an architecture that spoke of the region's past and of aesthetic pleasures of brick, limestone, and Gothic and Classical detailing. Nobody will ever build like that again.

The memories that the book will keep alive may help relieve grief for the lost buildings. Some of the heritage buildings depicted in the book (including most of those in Akaroa) have survived. The Trusts hope that the second edition of City and Peninsula will not remind us of what we have lost but will also strengthen our resolve of the people of Christchurch, Lyttelton and Akaroa to care properly for what remains.
